

Chesapeake Bay Program's Water Quality Stations

The Chesapeake Bay Program has been measuring nutrient parameters at water quality stations throughout the Chesapeake Bay and tidal tributaries since 1984. These visualized locations only include sites recording data from 2010 onward.

Dozens of nutrient parameters exist in downloadable geographically referenced data sets, for example dissolved oxygen, organic carbon, and suspended sediment. I chose total nitrogen and total phosphorus for my analysis.

- Water Quality Stations
- Chesapeake Bay Watershed